In little more than a month, Heston Blumenthal will light up London's new Terminal 2 at Heathrow Airport. His ambitious bid to offer exquisite, Michelin standard food at lightning speed is sure to be tested when the Queen's Terminal (its official name) opens for business. With an inventive menu celebrating classic British dishes like fish and chips, the food is sure to leave travellers with a lingering taste of Britain. But Heston isn't the only top chef to take on the terminals. Here are a few of the best airport restaurants to book on your next trip.

A foodie oasis at Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport in Atlanta, One Flew South is led by Head Chef Duane Nutter and his team, who have reinvented classic dishes with their signature 'southernational' twist. The interiors of the dining space take inspiration from the great outdoors of the local surrounds, using materials like Cherokee marble and native heart pine. If you're looking for some first class sushi pre take off this is the place for you.
