How to Navigate America's Busiest Airports

Pack a portable charger, and your patience. The December holidays are among the busiest for travel across the country, making for lengthy airport security lines, fast food temptations and mass scrambles for open electrical sockets. While many airports have upgraded their concourses with shopping malls, commissioned artwork and even micro-hotels, some of the busiest remain miserable, according to a new study by J.D. Power, which listed Newark, New York's La Guardia and Los Angeles International as the bottom three in flier satisfaction.

Get the most out of LaGuardia and Los Angeles and more crowd-pleasing airports where fliers may enjoy a celebrity chef meal, a string quartet concert or an encounter with a friendly canine ambassador, in the domestic terminals of 10 airports across the country.

Best dining: Among many local choices, Atlanta's landmark Paschal's operates a satellite restaurant in Concourse B, serving Southern classics like fried chicken and catfish. Pick up pizza and hamburgers from Varasano's Pizzeria in Concourse A and Grindhouse Killer Burgers in Concourse D. For sit-down meals, try One Flew South in Concourse E, which conjures rural Georgia with a photo mural of a forest. The menu offers sushi and upscale Southern fare such as pork belly sliders and pulled duck sandwiches, many labeled gluten-free and available to go.
