Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport used to be, at best, a melancholy mall food court with an insane amount of plane traffic and a cameo in a Robert Downey Jr. movie no one remembers called Due Date. However, that's all changed (shout out to Ludacris!). These days, local chains are moving in and have ostensibly turned one of the busiest airports in the world into a culinary destination. But in an airport so damn big, how do you know where to find the best pre-boarding bites? Well, let us tell you. We went concourse by concourse and picked out the places you need to hit to fuel up before that long flight.

One Flew South

This upscale dining spot completely changed the airport when it opened as the only non-chain restaurant (at the time). Its regional cuisine, sushi, and craft cocktails have even been nominated for a prestigious James Beard award. It's not a stretch to say that THIS is the best restaurant in the airport and, quite possibly, all airports. Even the decor pays homage to its Georgia roots by using Cherokee marble and native heart pine wood.
